Bennettsville Historic District
(Boundary Increase)
Playhouse Theater

Marlboro County, South Carolina
county and State

The Bennettsville Historic District, listed in the National Register of Historic Places on 20 April 1978, includes the central portion of the town and is composed of both commercial, residential, and public buildings, churches, schools, and structures such as the town's water tower. Most of the historic resources date from the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. The district is comprised of two non-contiguous segments.

The Playhouse Theater is a masonry, two-story building with a vault facade. The vaulted opening is defined by a pointed, cusped arch, radiating, molded voussoirs, and a dominant keystone. A heavy, bracketed and dentilled cornice projects from below the stepped parapet. Double windows with four-over-four sash symmetrically flank the vault at both levels. A single, centered window pierces the corbelled frieze above the keystone. Part of the cast stone watertable was removed in order to affix a false facade in the 1950s, which was in turn removed in 1988.

When the Bennettsville Historic District was listed in 1980 the facade of the Playhouse Theater was obscured by a false facade erected in the 1950s and was therefore excluded from the boundaries of the district. This facade was removed in 1988. The theater is immediately adjacent to the existing historic district and is now eligible for inclusion.

The Playhouse Theater, originally an opera house and theater, was built in 1918 for T.C. Crosland and J.W. Tyson.(1) Crosland and Tyson were Bennettsville realtors and developers involved in developing a new commercial area adjacent to the central business district. The theater was designed to hold 500 patrons and had a balcony. A large stage and orchestra pit, complete with a full-time orchestra hired to play for all the theater's productions, helped to attract plays--particularly musicals--which travelled the circuit from Broadway. Minstrel shows and other road shows also played at the theater for a number of years, alternating with silent motion pictures and with local uses such as American Legion shows and contests or high school plays and graduations. By 1930, as the popularity of motion pictures eclipsed the demand for plays and road shows, the Playhouse Theater was sold to O.C. Scarborough; it operated as a movie theater for nearly fifty years afterward.(2)
